The exhibition consists of a series of portraits, people living in a world far from the physical world, a place without gravity, the digital world. A fluctuating space in constant transformation, where we navigate through thousands of windows, data, applications and devices where the screen becomes the mirror of the individual, a common mirror that can speak to us and guide us, and we allow ourselves to be led, more or less consciously . . .

Attila Szűcs places at the center an empty room with the lights on, a world that cannot be turned off.

Whose side are we on? Will the mirror/screen decide who we are . . . ?
